

About MUSKODAY FIRST NATION

Muskoday First Nation, originally known as John Smith Reserve, is composed of Cree and Saulteaux people that settled along the South Saskatchewan River in the 1870s. “Muskoday First Nation has a profound relationship with the land that is rooted in respect for the spiritual value of the earth and the gifts of the Creator and has a deep desire to preserve its relationship with the land and maintain the integrity and success of our Nation.” (www.muskodayfn.ca)

HIGHLIGHTS AND OPPORTUNITIES

- Chief Smith signed Treaty 6 in 1876 at Fort Carlton.
- Muskoday First Nation owns 55 acres of land in the RM of Corman Park, northeast of Saskatoon.
- Muskoday’s land is administered under the Muskoday First Nation Land Code (1997) and the Framework Agreement on First Nation Land Management. Muskoday First Nation was the first in the Province of Saskatchewan to take control of its land and resources, removing themselves from the land sections of the Indian Act. Their Land Use Plan was originally adopted in 2002 and was updated in 2015.
- In June 2015, Muskoday First Nation received the ‘Vision in Planning Award’ from the Canadian Institute of Planners for their Land Code.
- The Muskoday Economic Development Authority upholds the vision of the community through promoting business attraction and new economic opportunities.
- Muskoday recently celebrated the opening of their new Gas Bar and Convenience store.
